nah, Mary Ellen and William. Three step-children: Mary, Andrew and Alexander Mair. Elva and Annette Olson, two little girls, three and five years old, respectively, were left in their care for a few days by the mother, but she never returned. They were adopted and reared until they married.

Daniel McMillan was known as "Uncle Dan" to everyone who knew him. Heber was his home for over a quarter of a century. Being generous to a fault and without an enemy in the town, his friends were as numerous as his acquaintances. During his long residence here he established for himself a record as a man of integrity and uprightness.

He died at the home of his son, William McMillan, peacefully, as the blotting out of the sun's rays by a passing cloud, on April 29, 1902.

to her and whispered in her ear, "Mary, ye dinna ha too."

When she was about 20 she married Allan Mair, whom she had known since childhood. He was a steady, sober young man who worked on the farm and herded sheep.

They were strictly religious people, observing the Sabbath and attending the Kirk regularly.

They had a very comfortable home and although its furnishings were plain and simple, they were happy and contented and enjoyed it very much.

They were blessed with nine children. By 1850 the Mormon Elders came to Scotland, preaching a new and strange doctrine. After hearing it, she and her mother were baptized by her brother, John M. Murdock, who had previously joined the Church and

She confided this to her daughter Mary, who was fourteen.

She told her of her plans and Mary agreed to assist all she could in accomplishing them, and she did.

Although Mary's brother John's two children had died on the way to Utah, also her dear mother departed this life on the dreary plains, crossing the United States while pulling a handcart. Still she felt she wanted to go. As soon as plans were made for going, Mary, the daughter, carried bundles as soon as the mother could get them ready and took them to the home of a friend, to be ready when the time came for them to leave. John Aird was this friend, and he secured passage for them on the sailing vessel "Saint Mark."

The father had been led to believe they were going to visit friends for a while.
